LOUISIANA

Louisiana.

A semi-tropical land, hot and humid, while at the same time beautiful and somewhat mysterious. Romantically dark bayous and swamps lined with trees draped with Spanish moss appeal to the imagination. One can almost feel the past and experience the history of such settings working on the soul. Thoughts can turn quickly to pirates and other such legends.

These same waterways invite pirogueing and canoeing. Louisianians benefit from wildlife resources by hunting, fishing and trapping in the bayous, swamps and spillways. For many, these activities are their livelihood, while for others Louisiana is a "sportsman's paradise." At this time, the existence of one of these precious resource areas, the Atchafalaya Basin, is in jeopardy. Debate concerning the future of the basin rages on between landowners, environmentalists, sportsmen, and those living on or by the swamp. One thing is certain. Something must be done about the Atchafalaya Basin, or it will simply die.

Louisiana is different from every other state in the Union. Due to the large Catholic population, the state is divided into parishes rather than counties. Until recently, Louisiana was the only state where a pay-phone call could be made for only a nickel. But now that too has changed.

Differences go further, applying even to the people. Louisiana is the home of the Cajuns, some of the liveliest and most fun loving folks anywhere. Then to top it all off, no other state can match the food down south. Creole food is a specialty, and Louisiana seafood is absolutely the best.

Louisiana has a colorful history, and New Orleans stands as a unique modern day reminder of the past. The French Quarter, along with "the world's largest party," Mardi Gras, attracts tourists from throughout the country. Alas, carnival in New Orleans was quiet this year due to the policeman's strike.

Surviving the rage of the Civil War, antebellum plantation homes still stand in tribute to the past.

Even today, for better or for worse, Louisiana remains part of the Old South in tradition and in action. Although still somewhat lagging behind the rest of the Union, she is slow and easy, carefree and gracious.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The life of LSU's greatest professor came to an end in July, following a lingering respiratory infection. Prior to his death, Dr. Williams was preparing a book on the late President Lyndon B. Johnson. He will be greatly missed by his colleagues, students, and friends.

RENOWNED CIVIL WAR HISTORIAN RETIRES

Retiring from teaching after 38 years at LSU, Pulitzer Prize winning historian T. Harry Williams receives a standing ovation from colleagues and students in a packed 400-seat auditorium after delivering his final lecture.

"FRATERNIZING AND CHIVALRY"

The Civil War was a war of fraternizing and chivalry. Now let me explain what I mean by those terms. By fraternizing, I mean the usual amount of visiting, of social contacting back and forth that took place, principally between the enlisted men of these opposing armies. I know of no other war in which there was so much of this fraternizing as there was in the Civil War . . .

Now, Confederates and Federals had a great deal to talk about. And the way this fraternizing would usually start, it would be between men who were called "pickets," or outposts. They were stationed some distance in front of their armies, generally with a small stream of water between them and the enemy. And they might be stationed there for weeks just to watch what the other side was doing.

They'd be there a long time, and inevitably, they struck up acquaintances and then friendships with the enemy soldiers on the other side. And this would generally begin by hollering over something. All Confederates called all Federals simply "Yank." And all Federals called all Confederates "Johnny, Johnny Reb."

"How're you Yank?"

"How're you Johnny?"

"What are you doing? You want to trade some coffee for some tobacco?" — something like that.

They'd float things across the streams, float messages across. And then inevitably, they began to meet in the stream, or some men would come over to one side. Why not? They were going to be there a long time. Why should they do any killing?

In fact, they would make unofficial truces in which they would agree not to shoot unless they were ordered. Now understand, the officers didn't like this fraternizing. In fact, there were some high ranking generals who feared that the masses of troops, if left to themselves, might get together and make peace. Now that, I think, was unlikely, but it did worry some officers. But the officers thought this fraternizing dulled the martial edge, the urge to fight, and they were always trying to break it up.

When an officer would come down to a group of pickets, if they knew he was coming, they'd yell out a warning to their friends on the other side.

"Hey Yank, officer coming down; get under cover!" — something like that. Or they'd fire a warning shot.

One Confederate recorded this scene where a Confederate officer came down and began to berate his men for fraternizing with the Federals. He was just walking up and down berating them, and on the other side, the Federal soldier listening finally located where this guy was by the sound of his voice, and then he fired a shot. And there was a thud and then silence.

And the Yankee yelled across, "Did I get him?"

And one of the Confederate yelled back, "Yeah, and a good thing too; he was getting to be a damned nuisance."

"Laid on the public like a breeze through the night," writes one sports writer. Charlie McClendon's 18-year coaching career ends after a frantic telephone poll of Supervisors (upon recommendation of Athletic Director Paul Dietzel) that demands McClendon's stepdown as head coach at the conclusion of the 1979 football season, with a two-year appointment as assistant athletic director thereafter. McClendon will leave LSU as the "winningest coach in Tiger football history," with credits including National Coach of the Year in 1970 and SEC Coach of the Year in 1969 and 1970, leading LSU teams to 12 post-season bowl games (more than all Tiger coaches combined), and a game winning percentage ranking him ninth among 1978's "Top 20 Coaches" in the nation.

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times . . . it was the season of Light, it was the season of Darkness."

Charles Dickens, A Tale of Two Cities

The above lines were used to describe the turbulent times Europe experienced in the late 18th century. To a certain extent, they can also be used to describe the football fortunes of LSU in 1978. While it wasn't exactly the best of times, it certainly wasn't the worst of times either. The Tigers' season of Light provided four straight wins in the beginning of the year, as well as one-sided victories over arch-rivals Ole Miss and Tulane. The season of Darkness yielded three losses in the team's final five games, two of them (Alabama and Missouri) before nationwide television audiences.

The 1978 edition of LSU football started on a high note September 16 in newly-expanded Tiger Stadium. A crowd of 78,534, the largest ever to witness an LSU game in the historical structure, roared as the Fightin' Tigers took the field against an average Indiana squad. Hopes were high as the season got underway that warm evening. Forty-five lettermen were returning from the 1977 club, including eight of 11 starters on an offense that wrecked opposing defenses to the tune of 34 points per game while averaging better than 300 yards rushing each time they hit the field. They also had the team's first legitimate Heisman Trophy candidate in nearly 20 years in senior tailback Charles Alexander. The big Galveston, Texas, native had dodged, darted, high-stepped, and bulled his way to 1,686 yards in '77, third best in the nation behind two seniors, and was pre-season favorite to win the prestigious award with a strong showing in '78.

That night the Tigers had trouble with the pesky Hoosiers, failing even to score a touchdown in the second half, something that had only occurred once in 1977. But LSU hung tough to win, posting their first victory in an opening game since 1974. The triumph also touched off a four game winning streak, the most consecutive wins for a Charlie McClendon-coached team in the same season since 1973. Still, despite an unbeaten record and a No. 11 ranking in the polls, doubts surfaced about this Tiger team. LSU looked poor in squeaking past lowly Wake Forest. Then, after improving against Rice, they defeated Florida by hanging on after running up a big lead, the Tigers' first win in Gainesville in over a decade. Most agreed the young and surprisingly tough Georgia Bulldogs would be a stern test for Mac's Pack on October 14, and they were. But the Tigers flunked their Homecoming exam.

LSU was halfway to 5-0 when they took a comfortable lead into the locker room at intermission, but everything turned completely around in the final 30 minutes. A Bulldog returned the second half kickoff for a touchdown; then, the visitors quickly turned two turnovers into 10 more points. The shell-shocked Tigers couldn't recover, going down to their initial defeat of the campaign. Alexander, who had piled up 567 yards rushing going into the game, was "held" to 82 in the Bulldog encounter.

The team rebounded nicely, blanking Kentucky to avenge an humiliating loss to the Wildcats the previous year. Next came "The School You Love to Hate," Ole Miss. The Tigers easily ripped the Rebels 30-8, setting up a nationally televised show-down with highly ranked Alabama.

On November 11, the Tigers stood at the crossroads, ready to prove they could play with the "big boys." But Bear Bryant's crew had all the marbles. 'Bama toppled the Tigers, shattering LSU's hopes for an SEC crown.

Following that defeat, the Board of Supervisors, upon recommendation of Athletic Director Paul Dietzel, issued a statement demanding McClendon's stepdown as head coach at the conclusion of the 1979 football season, with a two-year appointment as assistant athletic director thereafter. The implication was clear. When one goes eight straight years without beating Alabama OR capturing a conference title OR winning a major bowl game, that person won't coach at Louisiana State University for a very long time afterward.

A few days after the announcement, a flat bunch of Bayou Bengals dropped a contest to Mississippi State. LSU closed the regular season with lackluster wins over pushovers Tulane and Wyoming, but they managed to secure a Liberty Bowl berth against Big-8 power Missouri.

The season closed on a sorry note against the northern Tigers. Ol' Mizzou jumped off to a 20-3 halftime bulge then held on as a gutty group of Tigers clawed back to make a game of it before falling 20-15.

Heisman hopeful Charles Alexander closed out a brilliant career at LSU by rambling for 133 yards on 24 carries and one touchdown against Missouri. Alexander, hampered by injuries, stacked defenses and an offensive line that failed to play up to par, still managed 1,172 yards on the ground for the regular season. In doing so, he established himself as the finest player ever to wear the Purple n' Gold, a player destined to provide some lucky professional team with many seasons of Light for many years to come.

COOPED UP

LSU is home to about 30,000 broilers and 6,000 layers. The coup is complete with chicken types ranging from highly developed strains of Leghorns to featherless mutations.

Consuming 15,000 pounds of feed weekly, the chickens dispute the old adage "eating like a bird." Their corn and soybean diet is mixed on the farm in large processors.

The cackling tenants pay for their room and board with that prized commodity, "the egg." And the birds pay more than their share of the rent as they lay about 62,400 dozen eggs per year, or about 35 cases weekly. These eggs are then washed, graded and packaged on the farm.

Campus Food services use about 90 percent of these eggs and broilers raised on LSU farms. The remaining 10 percent surplus is sold to wholesale producers.

Eggs sales bring in approximately $45,000 annually. This money is then reinvested into the farm to cover maintenance and operating expenses.

Everybody has problems, and chickens are no exception. Researchers here are attempting to solve some of these problems by developing faster growing broiler chickens and improving egg shell quality, something that has cost businesses and housewives thousands of dollars. Improvements in breeding, nutrition and genetic aspects are also being explored.

Working closely with the university are industries which provide major contributions to the farm, such as supplying the chickens needed for experiments, aiding with research projects, and providing financial support.

There are currently 1,200 students, including 12 graduate assistants, in the agricultural field of poultry who enjoy this high job demand from the federal government and various industries.

LSU is presently the only college in Louisiana that offers degrees in Poultry Science.

FIGHTING FAT THROUGH PSYCHOLOGY?

In its never ending fight against "the bulge," this round the LSU psychology department employed a different strategy: group therapy.

"We worked on changing how fast one eats, breaking the clean plate habit and assertive food refusal," says Dr. Donald A. Williamson, director of the project.

The two experiments involved were designed to help overweight couples and adolescents lose weight.

The weight loss program for couples depended upon each mate's supportive attitude. Eighty-eight couples were divided into ten groups for the ten week project in which different aspects of dieting, such as exercise, caloric intake, emotional stress, and eating habits, were discussed.

The intensity of mate cooperation was varied to determine how much influence a spouse's encouragement has upon weight loss.

Halfway through the joint exercise-dietary program, the average weight loss was 14 pounds per person.

The adolescent weight loss program, in conjunction with the Developmental Psychology Center, dealt with childhood onset obesity cases. Teenagers suffering from childhood obesity find losing weight much harder than those who become obese in adulthood.

Sixty overweight teens tried one of four weight loss methods. The first group reduced caloric intake; the second increased physical activity. A combination of exercise-diet was used in the third group. Group four received the same information as the others, but they did not have to keep written records.

"Our aim was to modify energy balance," says Dr. Williamson. "However," he continues, "we found it a chore to motivate these teens who have resigned themselves to life-long obesity."

In the third week of the plan, the average weight loss was one-half pound per week.

Year long follow-up sessions were planned after each program ended.

CLASSES ADVISE LOCAL FIRMS

Tennis balls from the Tennis Center are bouncing on more courts than ever. Increasing numbers of finger-lickers are turning their taste buds to Bonaparte's Fried Chicken. And, Chevy Chevettes are chalking up more miles than before.

"Before" is prior to the time LSU students in the Management and Marketing curriculum stepped in. For the past five years, they have been influencing the tennis you play, the chicken you eat and the car you drive.

The system is Management Consulting and Marketing Analysis Research for local businesses in the Baton Rouge area.

Two management classes, Business Policies and Problems and a seminar in Policy Formulation and Administration, comprise the Management Consulting Firm. These students work with the Small Business Association (SBA) to provide services to local businesses.

Problems such as accounting, cash flow, site location, business expansion, personnel recruiting, and management are among those undertaken by the young student analysts.

The services to the businesses are virtually free with the only cost involving small miscellaneous expenses incurred by the project itself such as transportation and duplications.

The system is reaping rewards for the businesses, residents and students in the Baton Rouge area. Businesses unable to afford professional consultation obtain valuable advice on cutting expenses and maximizing sales. The consumers, in turn, receive better service and quality for their dollar, while students working with the projects gain valuable business experience.

END STUDIES ALEXANDRIA

Pooling all efforts in the curricula, students and faculty in Environmental Design worked together in Alexandria, Louisiana, to consider the master plan and design of the city.

To understand the specific needs of the area, the students made numerous trips to Alexandria to work with the Rapides Area Planning Commission and various concerned citizens. The first part of the spring semester was spent developing master plans for the city. The latter half was devoted to detailing specific design solutions, like the River Front area, and to restoring older downtown buildings.

The 35 students were divided into four teams to work on the downtown area and two residential sections. The Planning Commission provided a budget to cover the students' project expenses.

The novice designers gained practical experience in dealing with various construction, economic, real estate, and business problems while they provided a valuable service to the city. The officials coordinating the project intend to employ LSU's solutions into a master plan package for the Rapides area.

IBM 3033 TAKES OVER

There was a time when computer science students had to wait in line for hours to run their programs and receive the results. The overloaded computer eventually became inoperable, causing work and research project delays.

Things changed in June, 1978, when LSU replaced the old IBM 360/65 with the IBM 3033 Processor Complex. For a whopping $6.5 million, the Baton Rouge campus now owns the largest single system of any university in the country.

Once the system's capabilities are built up to its maximum potential, the IBM 3033 will have much more speed and capacity than the older model.

When the 3033 is in full operation, many new things will be possible. For example, Administrative Data Processing records of 50,000 students from three campuses will be more accurate and readily available.

In addition, research programs in engineering, agriculture, mathematics, and computer science will be enhanced by access to the modern system. The computer, incredibly enough, may also be utilized for new applications in music.

In the future, terminals may be used for direct "on line" communication with the computer during registration. And before too long, enough terminals may be purchased for computer science students, thereby eliminating the present system of cards, keypunches and card readers.

THE CONTROVERSIAL NATIONAL TEACHER'S EXAM

The National Teacher's Exam results raised questions about the qualifications of Louisiana's teachers.

For the first time in the state's history, a standardized test was used as criteria for teacher certification. In the past, a college degree in education was the only requirement for a teaching certificate.

The new law went into effect in November '78 when 1,500 Louisiana college seniors sat down to take the five hour test. The multiple choice exam, made up by the Education Testing Services of Princeton, New Jersey, was divided into two parts: common knowledge and expertise in the student's particular field.

Disgusted students voiced their opinions. "The test has nothing to do with how to teach," said one. Others complained the exam was culturally biased and could not ensure teaching competency.

Louisiana has the highest cut-off point of the five states now using the NTE as a means for certification. The state does have the right to set the cut-off point; however, once the limit is set, the law prohibits making exceptions to pass failing students.

State Superintendent J. Kelly Nix and his committee were divided over the setting of a cut-off point. The final decision resulted in a scalar point system. Out of 1,800 possible points, the passing grade for elementary education was 1,031; for social studies teachers, 1,149; and for math teachers, 1,202.

Only 52.8 percent of those who took the first test passed. Of the 20 colleges and universities taking the exam, LSU-Shreveport had the highest passing rate at 100 percent. Southern showed the lowest scores with only two percent passing. LSU-Baton Rouge fared well with 81 percent of its students making the grade.

Those that fail have the opportunity to re-take the test as it is offered three times a year. In addition to the study guide, some schools, such as Southern, have instituted a preparatory course for education seniors facing the exam.

Dean of Education at LSU, Peter Soderbergh, thinks the test may backfire. "No young person of potential in his right mind will want to undergo such a punitive experience so he can secure such a low-paying job," he said.

GOT YOUR EARS ON?

Absolute quiet exists in a small, isolated room deep in the basement of the Electrical Engineering Building. An insulated "sound room," one of the largest in the country, contains special stereo-testing equipment. This site is home base of the Engineering Acoustical Research Society (EARS).

EARS is a student organization with big plans. President Richard Gary says he hopes his club will become "... a consumer-oriented student service. We tested commercial stereo speakers," he continues, "to find out if it's worth the money you pay for it."

The Engineering Department has not offered courses in acoustical engineering in some time. Dr. Robert Nethken, who serves as faculty advisor to EARS, fostered student interest in the field of sound and acoustics in 1977 when the "sound room" was rediscovered. Since then, he and EARS members have searched far and near and have pleaded and bargained with private companies for new test equipment.

Although lack of available funds still plagues the group, EARS members hope to become part of a national engineering society that will subsidize the group's expenses. Some day, EARS would like to turn the forgotten basement room into a recording studio, a wide range test facility, and a research lab for advancements in acoustical engineering.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE

Experience counts, especially for criminal justice majors. And here at LSU, that's the logic behind criminal justice student assignments to organizations like the Rape Crisis Center, Family Court, the Juvenile Detention Home, and the District Attorney's office.

"The department emphasizes the behavioral aspect of law enforcement," says Nicholas Astone, criminal justice instructor. "We teach our students how to avoid violence and how to handle the people they may meet in their profession."

Formerly the Department of Law Enforcement, the Department of Criminal Justice offers a full four-year curriculum. And, just for the record, about 27 percent of the students enrolled are women.

The State Police Crime Lab is the vehicle through which students learn finger-printing, blood-typing, voice prints, and drug analysis techniques. Guest speakers also demonstrate the polygraph as well as different types of ballistics, firearms and bombs.

Field trips to state prisons and correctional institutions serve as part of the Introductions to Corrections course. Students utilize these trips to interview inmates and administrators, thereby gaining valuable insight into both sides of the penal system.

SPECIAL SERVICES FOR FRESHMEN

During the spring, counselors pour over high school seniors' ACT scores, grade transcripts and class standings looking for weak students who possess certain strong points. Once they spot the weaknesses, counselors begin looking for potential. Unbalanced ACT scores indicate a pupil has strong motivating interests in certain areas.

Junior Division's new Special Services program is designed to help students who may be weak in some areas but show enough potential to become college graduates.

Over 200 incoming freshmen were invited to participate in 1978, and although not all students receive an invitation, anyone who seeks help can benefit from the program.

Freshmen involved in the project undergo extensive scholastic counseling throughout their first year. In addition to their regular classes, students earn two college credits for a study skills course. Remedial courses in math, English and reading skills are also offered.

LSU received funds from the state and the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare to implement the two-year program. Dr. Mildred Roberts, director of Special Services at LSU, hopes the program will be extended another four years once the results have been analyzed.

THE COLLEGIUM MUSICUM

The cornetto, the sackbutt, the viola de gamba, the shawn, and the krummhorn are among the unusual instruments played by LSU's Collegium Musicum.

Led by Dr. Wallace McKenzie, the group studies and plays a variety of instruments all dating before the 18th century. The instruments produce an old, courtly sound, very different from the music of today. The dates of the composers and their works range from 1200 to 1750.

Each student who plays with the Collegium is expected to research a composition of interest to him. The student then introduces the composition to the class, giving the historical background of the composer and the historical setting of the piece.

Most of the pieces dating earlier than 1600 have no instrumentation marking, so the groups must experiment with different instruments until they find a sound that is both satisfying and appropriate.

After forming a repertoire, the Collegium performs, usually once a semester. The members of the ensemble dress according to the time in which the music was written.

During the spring concert, slides were shown of the art work contemporary to the piece being performed, thus enabling the audience to relate the composers to their periods. Works by Cipriano de Rore (1516-1565), Jacob Obrecht (1452-1502) and J. S. Bach (1685-1750) were included in that performance.

Since its inception six years ago, the Collegium has been open to anyone interested in the music of this earlier time period. Most of the students who play with the ensemble have some knowledge of the instruments used and have played similar instruments before.

SOCIAL WELFARE VIA VIDEOTAPE

A major videotape resource project was instituted at the School of Social Welfare in 1978. The wide-ranging project will eventually lead to a package of materials that will aid in the instruction and training of mentally-retarded children throughout the state.

The project, supported by a federal grant, was actually a multi-phased program aimed, not only at professionals, but also people in the community who were involved with these special children through their personal lives.

One of the videotaped films was a synopsis of a six-month, in-service training program held at the Columbia State School. The film, according to project coordinator Judi B. Odom of the LSU Social Welfare staff, will aid parents of mentally retarded children in learning new techniques of training and rearing. These techniques will facilitate the child's transition from a special school into the community.

Other major projects in various stages of development at the Social Welfare School include the establishment of an off-campus training center for state employees in social work; a program for special instruction in alcoholism counseling; movements toward the implementation of a doctorate program; and a new degree option in master's of social science planning.

SEA GRANT

The use of crawfish waste as fertilizer, the feeding of caged bullfrogs and the immunization of alligators against septicemia were all Louisiana research projects funded by the National Sea Grant Program.

In 1978, LSU was awarded the status of Sea Grant College, the highest level in the Sea Grant Program. A university earns this title only after years of undisputed high performance and productivity in marine and coastal studies. Only 12 other universities have reached this status since the inception of the Sea Grant Program in 1966.

The Louisiana Sea Grant Program presently includes four basic categories of research. Systems Ecology studies the effects of pollution upon the water's productivity. Fisheries and Seafood Industries deals with problems related to shrimp, crawfish and fish processing. Coastal Zone Planning and Development tries to maximize the potential of natural water resources. And, Law and Socio-economics is currently developing a property rights regime for ocean space.

With Sea Grant aid, Marine Sciences has built up solid Master's and Doctoral programs. Faculty from over 20 different academic departments have been involved with the Sea Grant Program. Graduate students work directly on research while undergraduates work in the labs and offices to gain valuable experience in the field of sea development.

VET SCHOOL DEDICATION

"It was almost as hard to get the school as it is for a student to get in," quipped State Senator B. B. Rayburn at the official dedication of the new Veterinary Medicine Building. In 1965, Rayburn introduced the legislative bill to build the school. He toured the final result of his efforts along with other visitors at the October 28 ceremony.

The facilities at the teaching hospital enable the student to work with animal patients accepted for diagnosis and treatment from Baton Rouge and surrounding cities.

Within the hospital are laboratory and research sections as well as treatment centers for both large and small animals. The small animal ward consists of four 25-cage patient rooms. Animals ranging from dogs, cats, pigs, and deer have been examined and treated in the small animal clinic.

The large animal clinic treats mostly horses and cattle and is equipped with living quarters for these animals. Stalls are lined by aisles for hay, water and feed. Animals with contagious diseases are separated from other animals north of the main building in an isolation area.

The centralized surgical area provides facilities for both large and small animals. Equipment such as remote television cameras, an electric call station for nurses and a medical gas system supply the student with sophisticated training facilities. The recovery room is padded with movable floors to allow the patient easy movement while still under anesthesia.

The pharmacy aids the student in services for teaching and research and also dispenses drugs and supplies for treatment of animals. The central sterile supply includes laundry sterilization and storage with access directly into the central corridor of the surgical area.

The Instructional Research area is equipped with vital communication sources, including medical illustration space for photography, graphics, closed-circuit television, motion-picture production, and special systems maintenance.

The veterinary medicine library, located on the first floor, contains approximately 12,000 volumes on health information and other related areas for research and material for the Baton Rouge area.

TRAGEDY

One person was killed and five were injured en route to a Theta Xi pre-initiation ceremony on River Road near Brusly.

The accident occurred late January 11 when a car struck a group of pledges who were being led across the street blindfolded. Reports indicated the car was blinded by the lights of the truck used by the fraternity to unload the pledges. The truck was parked facing the oncoming car, and the pledges were led across the street near the back of the truck, behind the lights.

The tragedy not only sparked controversial publicity concerning hazing, its definition, and the Greek system in general, but also a grand jury investigation in which Assistant District Attorney Barry Wilkinson later announced no charges would be filed.

The fraternity was placed on total probation for one year.

KEEPING THE CLARETIANS

Bishop Joseph V. Sullivan's dismissal of Father Dan Drinan and other Claretian priests sets off an uproar of protests, press conferences and prayer vigils in the Baton Rouge Catholic community. Doing it in the name of "the honor and glory of God and the good of my neighbor," the bishop gave no reason for the ouster that many view as his attempt to destroy the community's "progressive, tolerant" attitudes.

Sullivan said that informing the Claretians of the reason for their dismissal "... might depend on whether he [Drinan] sees fit to ask me for them [and] it is done in the context of a friendly discussion and not something that would be revealed to the press."
In Drinan's words, that was "like offering to give the dead body a copy of the autopsy."

BASKETBALL

There were a lot of things about the 1978-79 basketball season that had never been seen before.

First off, there was a quiet and somewhat semi-reversed Dale Brown. Yes, a new, improved Dale Brown. This was a Dale Brown who wasn't telling the world how his team was going to do this and that.

Maybe that's because Brown knew what talent he had on hand. To lead off his lineup, Brown had All-SEC forward Durand "Rudy" Macklin, a guy who had a jump shot so quick that nobody saw it go up except Macklin himself. Then, there was DeWayne "Astronaut" Scales at the other forward, a slightly matured sophomore who liked to leap backboards with a single bound.

At guard was Ethan "The Huck" Martin, a super quick player whose main ambition in basketball was to be the first man ever to steal the ball and the pants off of an opposing guard. The other guard spot belonged to the "From the Bronx" kid, Al Green, a transfer by way of North Carolina State, Western Arizona Junior College and various other fine institutions too numerous to mention. Green's main ambition in basketball was to steal the pants off of an opposing guard before Martin had a chance to.

And at center, as Big Sid Crocker the LSU P.A. announcer would cheerlead, was Lionel "Tree" Green, rebounder, shot-blocker and jabbermouth supreme.

Also back after a one year lay-off following a one-on-one battle with the books was Greg "The Cookiemanager" Cook, the muscle and hustle of the Tiger front line who later turned out to be a life-saver.

Top-flight reinforcements (there were no "substitutes" in Brown's eyes) were Jordy Hultberg, who only hit shots from the balcony; Rick Mattick, a 7-0, 270-pound man of bronze who filled the lane like a battleship; Ernest Brown, a walk-on from a year ago who would later in the '79 season cause Kentucky to walk off; Willie "The Black Jet" Sims, a guard with unlimited talent who learned to get his talent under control as the season progressed; Andy Campbell, the 7-2 Aussie whose height was a topic for campus conversation ("I wonder what it's like to date a guy that tall"); Gus "The Bus" Rudolph, a Louisville freshman who became a hero later in the year; and freshman J. Brian Bergeron of Port Allen who, along with Redemptorist's Duane DeArmond, added local flavor to the team.

So, the season began. LSU's exhibition win over the Australian Champs was like the world's tallest five basketball players playing two and a half tag teams of midget wrestlers. Then, with Macklin leading the way, Brown's Bengals swept past two opponents before running into trouble.

Well, actually, Macklin fell on to trouble when he broke a bone in his foot after coming down with a rebound in practice on the last day of November. The injury, as it turned out, put him out the rest of the season.

Upon this lousy turn of events, Brown inserted Cook in Macklin's place and turned to seniors Al and Lionel Green for leadership. Brown told the press, in so many words, that the Tigers weren't about to pack up their lunches and forget the picnic.

LSU finished off the pre-SEC games with an 8-0 record and shot up in the national rankings. Still, there was some question as to the caliber of the Tigers' opponents. After beating Georgia, the Tigers put the critics to rest in not-so-heavenly peace when they marched into Rupp Arena in Lexington, Kentucky, and marched out with a 93-89 win over the Wildcats for the first Tiger win ever at Kentucky. During the course of the game, Ernest Brown came off the bench and scored 14 key points.

The Tigers then dropped two in a row, the longest losing streak of the year, before getting their act back together with wins over Florida and Auburn. The following week at Ole Miss, the largest basketball crowd in Louisiana collegiate history, 14,568, was on hand as the Tigers relied on a game-winning free throw by Rudolph to pull out an overtime win. Then, after a two-point win at home over Tennessee, the Tigers lost to Georgia on the road.

From then on, the Tigers were clear for their landing to take the first SEC Championship in 25 years. Along the way, LSU revenged an earlier loss to Vanderbilt with a 92-71 beating, and so the title-clinching game was set with Alabama.

With 13,754 present in the LSU Assembly Center, the magical moment of winning the SEC Championship unfolded. There was Scales, bombing from the outside and throwing in a monstrous dunk after Martin gave up an easy lay-up. There was Al Green, scoring 28 points and dunking in the face of two Alabama defenders. And most importantly, there was Mattick, cramming in an unbelievable two-handed jam that sent Tiger fans in newly proclaimed "Death Dome" soaring out of their seats.

Alabama didn't believe it either when a makeshift SEC Championship flag was dropped from the roof with 38 seconds left in the game. It didn't matter to LSU because the Tigers easily won 86-66.

After LSU dropped their final season game to Mississippi State, the rumblings started and couldn't be stopped with R-O-L-A-I-D-S.

The rumblings turned into a volcano at the SEC Tournament in Birmingham when Tiger coach Brown found pro basketball agent Andrew Benson of Houston in the room of sophomore star Scales. Brown was hot. Scales had told Brown that he hadn't talked to Benson when he actually had. Brown found relief from the problem and spelled it S-U-S-P-E-N-S-I-O-N.

With Scales suspended after the LSU loss to Kentucky in the SEC Tourney, LSU went on to beat Appalachian State in the quarterfinals of the Mideast Regionals, using 14 points from Mattick and 16 rebounds from Lionel Green.

In the semi-finals, LSU ran into the eventual national champions, Michigan State. For about two minutes, the game looked like it would be a game. But State's Gregory Kelser converted two steals into two dunks, and he and the rest of the Spartans skipped down the Yellow Brick Road to the National Championship, living happily ever after.

But the book on the Tigers isn't closed. There's always next year's edition . . . people just hate bad endings.
